

To: Jim Goodman

Subject: The Institute of Divine Arts invites WSSU students to volunteer

The Institute of Divine Arts News Release

For Immediate Release

September 20, 2012

The Institute of Divine Arts invites WSSU students

Winston-Salem, NC. The Institute of Divine Arts invites Winston-Salem State University students to come and be a part of their extraordinary dance experience. Every year, WSSU students are invited to come mentor, choreograph, instruct, and volunteer at the studio. This mentorship program allows both the students and mentors the opportunity to grow as dancers and as people.

The students who mentor at the studio have dance experience from various backgrounds. "Volunteering at the Institute of Divine Arts allows me to use the dance knowledge I gained as a child and pass it on to other young girls. I grew up as one of the only African American girls at my dance studio back home. Sharing my love of dance insures that the artistry of dance continues in the African American community and I found a home away from home," Katherine proclaimed.

As a leading provider of the Arts in the Triad area, IDA offers the best instructions in dance, voice, tumbling, and acting for African American girls and boys. They are dedicated and passionate about serving the needs of their customers each and every day.

With over 25 years of experience in teaching and developing young artists, IDA enthusiastically offers recreational classes, competitive teams, and performance company opportunities.

###

For more information:

Angela Beatty

Director of IDA

336-231-2202

thedivinearts@yahoo.com